The community radio station played an important role in informing community members of proper conduct during protest action.

Wednesday, 7 May 2014 – a historical day in South Africa, which marked the fifth national general elections against the backdrop of the 20-year anniversary of freedom. People from all walks of life turned out in their numbers to exercise the right to vote at various voting stations in eThekwini. The elections were peaceful with no disruptions except in Sydenham when an inebriated man was arrested for drunken disorderly. Community members waiting to vote were angry at the police but the situation was calmed down very quickly.

In the rest of eThekwini, voting proceeded smoothly with many “born frees” really excited to be casting their votes for the very first time.

Sthembile Langa (20) studies at the Durban Institute of Technology. “It gives me pleasure to vote for the first time. I will now be able to raise my voice with confidence knowing that I have voted for the government of my choice. In the next five years I would love to see the elected government paying vigorous focus on education,” she said.

Nkululeka Mcwabe (26) from Azalia said, “An opportunity to vote means being able to exercise your democratic right. I am a bit concerned that most people seem not to understand that because I have seen people being intimidated when they campaign for their political parties even at this station. There is still more that must to be done by the IEC and political organisations on voter education. I wish for the elected government to ensure that the youth is equally represented in government so that they will have platform to raise their issues e.g. unemployment.”

Sihle Mkhize (23) said, “It is my first time to vote and I think it’s very important for everyone to exercise this right. I believe it is because of the voting process that we see development in our areas. What people need to do is to approach their elected government if they see some loopholes.”

Vuyisile Mkhize (56) said, “Voting to me means a lot of things; we are now able to speak to government if we are not happy about governance, and lot of people who did not have homes previously now own RDP houses with electricity and water. Over and above that our government still have a duty to create more work opportunities for our children.”

Percy Sfiso Cele (45) said, “Voting means emancipation of democracy and not undermining the role played by those who fought for freedom and human rights. They lost their lives so that we are able to vote. Our role is to advise leaders to correct their mistakes and do the right things at the right time.”

Themba Khuzwayo (50) said, “Voting is very important to me. I started voting during time of Mandela in 1994. Voting has assisted us with many things. We would be in a lot of trouble if government did not provide child support grants because lot of us are not working. I have already voted and I will vote in the next elections.”

Nokuthula Ngcobo (33) said, “It is important to vote because you are able to choose the government you want. Today we have a government that delivers because it was elected by the people. I would be happy if government can continue providing services in a manner that it is doing at the moment.”

Most of the farm workers in the areas of Modimolle and Bela-Bela did not pitch up to exercise their right to vote, since their employers disallowed them. It was said that the employers would release the farm workers earlier than usual to allow them to vote. Party agents were deeply concerned because the farm labourers would have been tired and some had to travel or walk a long distance to reach their voting stations.

Modimolle residents went out in numbers to cast their votes to exercise their right to choose their desired leadership. Solomon Mahlangu, Lekkerbreek and OR Tambo voting stations were visited. Some voters felt free to voice their feelings after they voted.

“I feel very happy that I was able to vote. It’s a privilege considering the fact that my fallen heroes and heroines fought and devoted their lives for our equality, freedom and democracy.” She further stated that she hoped things changed for the better such as the creation of real permanent jobs and the elimination of corruption.

“I was also happy to have been afforded the opportunity to make my own choice of government.” He hopes that his chosen party wins and will bring positive change in youth development and job creation especially for tertiary qualified young men and women.

“I felt overjoyed that I made it to the polling station to make my mark.” She said that they already have running water, RDP houses and electricity; it is time to finance their tertiary education.
The GCIS official sought permission to take pictures from the presiding officers at all the stations visited. We went to voting stations at the Mayflower High School, Tisiteni Primary School, MP Magagula High School, Lobhengula Primary School and Lindzalokuhle Primary School.

The voting station at Mayflower High School had almost no people queuing. Those who came voted and left without queuing.

There was no queue at the Tisiteni Primary School voting station, voters just arrived, voted and left without queuing. The additional voting stations available since the previous elections helped in reducing long queues at many stations. Members of the South African Police Service were also present to assist the IEC in ensuring free and fair elections.

The stations at Fernie had very short queues especially at Lobhengula Primary School. The fact that there were no queues, and if there were any they were short, indicated the efficiency of the voting process. The addition of more voting stations also helped to minimise the long queues.

Elections in Umgungundlovu started well in all local municipalities without intimidation taking place except in the Umshwathi Local Municipality where members of the IFP and ANC had a fight. It has not been established what started the fight. It was reported that the local Mayor and Ward Councillor had intervened to calm the situation. The voting process proceeded without further interruptions. There are many voting stations and assistance with reducing long queues.
Kgaugelo Mahlake: First-time voter had this to say, “I am so delighted to be part of this historic moment. Finally I got the chance to cast my vote so I now also have a voice.

Ba-Phalaborwa Local Municipality – Election Report.

MM Malatji said she was very proud to be voting. “This reminds me of the first time when I voted in 1994. I was doing my second year at the Naphuno Teaching College and now I am a proud teacher thanks to this democracy.”

People woke up early to queue at Namakgale, Lethabong voting station: Ward 7 of Ba-Phalaborwa Local Municipality.

“Another first-time voter, Lucky Magoto, was excited to be voting saying, “My party will bring change to this country and in the 2016 Local Government Election my party will rule and reshuffle.”

The Bronkhorstspruit area experienced violent service-delivery protests during the first quarter of this year. Public facilities and some private property were destroyed. Despite this, there was a high voter turnout during the 2014 general elections. However, the voter turnout among the youth was not as high as expected but those who turned up were very enthusiastic about voting for the first time in their lives.

Gugu Zwane (19) from Zithobeni Extension 2 said, “I am so excited for the experience but I am still not sure who I will vote for. I hate corruption as it is dragging our country down and I wish whoever wins will speed up job creation especially for the youth.”

Jabulani Maseko (20) said, “I am happy to vote for the first time in my life because the late Nelson Mandela fought and sacrificed a lot for us to be free, to be who we want to be, and to choose a party we like. I am voting for change as I want to see more jobs for all but especially for young people.”

Zizi Ndlovu (19) from Zithobeni said, “I am very, very happy to be here because by voting, I am raising my voice loud and clear and I am voting for the party of my choice. All I want to see after voting is service-delivery improvements.”
The 2014 National and Provincial elections went smoothly in the Ehlanzeni District Municipality. At Bushbuckridge, Mbombela, Umjindi and Thaba Chweu the local municipal communicator’s reported that there were also no incidents.

Ms Lungile Lubisi from Driekoppies Village queued to go inside to cast her vote. She wants the winning party to provide a satellite campus of the University of Mpumalanga in the Nkomazi area.
