PROFILE

Nonhlanhla Bakasa better known as AdoWord is a Professional Speaker, Entrepreneur, Television personality as well as a graduate in BA Human Sciences and Social Services (Psychology). Nonhlanhla is the founder of AdoWord Multimedia. The company provides professional speaking services to schools, organisations and at events hosted by various corporates. The company also runs community development projects in the areas of youth and disability.

She is an activist for persons with disabilities (as she is a paraplegic and wheelchair user herself) and has addressed various crowds on the issue. Moreover, Nonhlanhla takes an active role in shaping the community, by participating in outreaches and various NGO programs such as the national annual disability awareness campaign known as Casual Day South Africa where she is one of the Goodwill Ambassadors of the campaign. In addition, she is employed as a Development Officer at the National Council of and for Persons with Disabilities (NCPD) where she works closely with entrepreneurs with disabilities, youth with disabilities and represents the NCPD on various media platforms regarding the topic of disability. Nonhlanhla has experience in sitting as a member of the board of trustees in different disability related organisations.

Nonhlanhla is determined to leave a legacy of a fully inclusive world, where discrimination and unnecessary boundaries are removed. She is eager and willing to grow even further as she plays her part in building a brighter tomorrow by showing everyone that nothing is impossible.
